Paramilitary Group

In most commonwealth states security structure depicts a paramilitary structure. Based on their jurisdictional principles and national state laws, their structure is not prohibited but encouraged.

Guided by their institutional policies and legislative frameworks, these entities provide services to the business platform clients.

As seen in most commonwealth states, crime represents the biggest threats to local businesses operating in their state. As such, the formulation of these structures represents a balance between military and quasi organizational structures.

Crimes emanate a great desire to disturb the local economy and at sometimes look for aid to diminish their outlook as harmful, while gaining acceptance in the local business chambers.

Corporate Survival Mode

As the survival rate of corporate leaders are tested daily in states with criticality of failure, operational mode increases dramatically to geo-social issues, these paramilitary groups are the protection of many threats theatres.

Paramilitary security functions on one principle of enforcing all existing taught survival methods on the one principal approach of ensuring business continuity remains at a high confidence level always.

A Nation State Secured

Their level of confidence is determined by their level of confidentiality in dealing with security threats below the radar of a commonwealth state laws or policies.

Hence their operability can be recognized as a militia group performing more of an asymmetrical style of operation than a conventional type security operation body does.

However true this may be, its operations are only designed in lieu of the type of corporate structures and investments placed in protecting an asset necessary in building the local economy of the commonwealth state.

Paramilitary security agencies are an essential operation in economically strained economies, as its focus on protection of an economical asset class in a division falling far from the responsibility of the armed force.

Paramilitary Technicals

1.A paramilitary group is a necessary security operation for today's global threats.

2. A paramilitary security group must be designed into a business model and be controlled internally if state laws are placed to control its existence.

3. A paramilitary security group must be designed to complement the territory it covers and be a shadow operation within the territory it operates.

4. Some commonwealth states defer the title of paramilitary and may encourage the use of a softer business model approach, hence all lawful policies must be adhered to, however its operational culture and training must be able to match the threats level of the territory, in protecting multinational corporations and its assets.

5.Note that some existing private security operations possess paramilitary security culture but their operations are not; as they are guided by state laws and policies.
