Burning Midnight Light!

Sleepless nights, days in days out without a management of time, a schedule practice of utilizing every hours of the time slot, make good on the promise of success.

Success can be described as a pivoting, prioritized end goal an aspirant individual strive to attain in a state of readiness and a state of completeness in order to make one whole.

There exist no parts solution and revitalized to make a whole but the whole with many parts where there is existence and all it ever needs is the mobility to go a distance as a completed set piece.

It was never nor could it be described as an aspirant must pick up every pieces missing to make them a whole success story.

For the take away is the real many success stories end with delusion and their inability to continue.

Because of that one lesson being taught about finding the necessary tools on your journey to create the perfect success line.

The whole self must be put to work early so that whole can be able to measure its parts and to continually work at it until it becomes a reflex action.

The journey is when the whole is an exercised capable test which becomes confident to validate their complete state by venturing amongst other competitive arenas to establish mastery in that profession.

Paying the Price of Sacrifice

As success is purposeful and not intended. Its action must be harmonized into the sentient emotions focus on a willful act to demand more of yourself and place that pressure to change many habitual status quo.

As the insomnia effect is the symptom of something; is in its rightful state and the actions are purposeful derivatives of good actions to improve the whole self.

It is never far from the idea of a sacrificial lamb but a necessary approach to build the masterpiece many years from now would become a new cultural identity of what success means and ought to be.

Chastised and ridiculed are the behavior of those who refuse to participate who hate on the idea of improvement and improvisation.

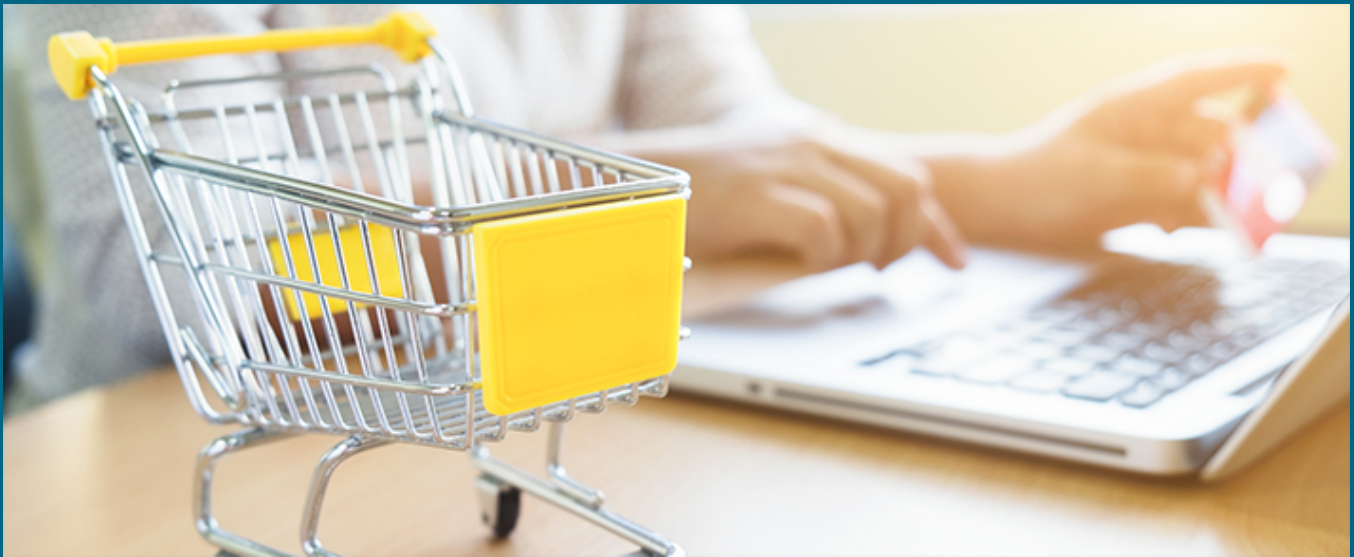

It is a benefit for all, the action of a few and the many who need to be consumers to survive.

The Revolution In You!

Success is a revolution, a revolving door nearing all desires, showing all open critics and surprisingly them with clear affliction that they can survive more so than the creator itself.

A resemblance of industrialization, a product of cultural lineage bestowed to worth more than the parts which holds it together.

A gallery of talents all in displayed, placed to put the onlookers into a space of identity, confusion or illusion of hope to the wondrous ideals it represents.

The stories it tells over and over and over; many people of many races of many cultures of many disposition all reiterate on the importance of tangible success. It furthers propel the disbelievers that nothing is possible and no feat is far from a successful tale.

With all that said in distinct nature of the importance of success to dwell on, is it impossible to demand of all to be their own master piece as a whole now and to show the world now without hindrance, fear, favor or malice? Without feeling the pressures that parts are missing and only a venture can propel the stagnant idealist to move forward.

Such a waste if their thoughts ever manifest into a culture of habits.

Success comes with an uncertain price, no one knows its value but those who have walked the trail are observant to its rewards.

A continue rewards which is never ending, ever purpose and deliberate for it fuels them to be more productive than before.

To be competitive as it is written before, now and in the future, for its existence encourages the incipient being to fight for their survival as it is the only means for civilized homo sapiens to evolve.
